Chapter 2 by Aethena

When you live through life alone, it really hits you. You don't realize it at first, but when you do, it changes your whole perspective on everyone and everything.

It starts off small- like a tiny wave you see crashing on the beach- it can't hurt you, and you don't expect it to. Then a second wave comes, 'oh it's nothing you say', and brush it off. Repeatedly, waves come and go, and you did your best to stay away from the damage it would cause, but when those waves build up- the other bigger from the first, you can't run away. You can't help but do nothing. It hits you with a great force and swallows you whole. And you're only left with emptiness that you've tried so hard to cope with that no one can help, not even yourself.
